Selecting a region will display the countries and expand the tree.

Selecting a country will display the summary information for the country and expand to the leaf properties of the country.

Selecting a leaf will expand that particular section in the content window.

I like the region interface from the World Factbook, simple and clean interface. I replicate that here.

It would be great if we could replicate some of the interactivity that the Flash control provides on the Source site via a React component.

When a region is selected the region content window will populate the content for the region listing out the countries in the region and displaying the regional map.

This content layout replicates some of the design that the existing Worldfactbook uses with accordion to shrink content.

The nav approach intends that when a leaf is selected in the left Nav that the accordion for that section will expand.

This alternative approach displays all content on the page. Note this approach really only works for desktop viewing, the content could be overwhelming for a mobile device and should probably fall back to the accordion design using a responsive approach.

Selecting a leaf on the left nav would result in scrolling to the matching content title.
